

MASTER OF ARTS IN ENGLISH (M.A.)

Purpose

The purpose of the Master of Arts in English program is to equip students, within a biblical worldview, to pursue further studies in English language arts at the doctoral level, as well as to prepare for careers related to the field. The program will provide students with the opportunity to study the texts of literature in English and the Western tradition, the critical tradition pertaining to these texts, and critical approaches to interpreting texts, as well as a background in research methods and the practice of writing and in the linguistic characteristics of English throughout its history, offered in advanced degree programs in English. This program in English language and literature is practical in its reading and writing about a broad spectrum of texts in English, theoretical in its observation of texts through the diverse critical lenses of current literary theory, philosophical in its investigation of the meaning of literary texts in the human experience, professional in its preparation for further work in the academic disciplines as well as to a wide variety of professional disciplines to which a studied understanding of the human experience is valuable.

Program Learning Outcomes

The student will be able to:

- Discuss English language and literature and critical theory in a manner appropriate to the field.
- Produce in-depth research using appropriate scholarly methods and resources.
- Write in a professional and scholarly manner.
- Evaluate the relationships between literary works and their contexts.
- Analyze literary texts, theory, and history through a Christian worldview.
